Betel Nut	betel nut	Betel chewing is widely practiced in some parts of Asia and the Pacific islands. Betel (or areca) nut, the large seed of an Asian palm tree Areca catechu , is wrapped in the leaf of the betel pepper tree, Piper betle , to which is added a pinch of burnt lime and flavorings. In contact with saliva, the mixture releases arecoline, an anticholinergic CNS stimulant, somewhat similar to nicotine. Betel chewing can produce dependence, and habitual use often results in health problems, particularly diseases of the mouth, including cancer.
